Statement on Safety

Delta Center Stage has installed and is running a disinfection technology in the EE Bass Cultural Arts Center known as Photocatalytic Oxidation. This system, based on narrow-spectrum ultra-high intensity ultraviolet light, now runs continuously in the air conditioning ductwork at the center. It is a scientifically proven methodology of clearing virtually all organic contaminants from airborne systems in which it operates.

What does this mean for your safety? It means that if you take reasonable personal precautions as you arrive at a Stein Hall event, you may expect that transmission of airborne viruses, bacteria, mold, and VOCs will be almost totally mitigated. Another person may transmit any number of viral or bacterial contaminants, but the air you breathe as you enter (and distance yourselves from others) will be germ-free.

In March of 2020, public gathering events were severely curtailed for reasons we all know very well. This meant, at the time, that Delta Center Stage simply could not operate. Since then, a series of very effective vaccines has been produced and distributed, and isolation and lockdown guidance has begun to rapidly disappear.

We are resuming operations. The aim is to fully resume normal and customary production, rehearsal, and performance operations with a full six-show schedule for the coming season and to fully resume our 40+ years' tradition of providing quality live performances produced from within.

With this announcement, we are placing our future in the hands of the community from which we spring. We cannot and should not depend on federal aid for our future. That future should be, and now is, entirely up to you. Your most generous and timely financial support is what we need. For the near term, we hope to provide some "virtual" attendance options for those who are not yet comfortable with public contact, but we must ask now for your most immediate and generous financial support in order to restart our operations. It is time reclaim our lives!
